Massage is a form of alternative medicine.

Alternative medicine is becoming increasingly popular as the general public becomes more aware of traditional therapies and holistic methods of healing through popular media and celebrities. As more people move towards a natural and healthy lifestyle, alternative medicine offers new ways of maintaining wellness and treating illnesses. If you are in the Albany area in New York, you have several options available to help you gain the proper knowledge and training to pursue a career in alternative medicine.

Austin's School of Spa Technology

Formerly known as the Austin Beauty School, Austin's Esthetics program prepares graduates for careers as medical, spa or salon estheticians, or skin care specialists. Aside from the usual topics on beauty and health treatments, Austin's Esthetics program also covers topics like bacteriology, anatomy and physiology, and cosmetic chemistry.

Center for Natural Wellness School of Massage Therapy

The Center for Natural Wellness School of Massage Therapy offers a state-recognized massage therapy curriculum that deals with the basics up to advanced level of massage therapy. It allows the student to choose from a number of massage therapy program alternatives that cater to full-time and part-time students. Financial aid is available.

Mildred Elley School of Health & Wellness Professions

The Mildred Elley School of Health & Wellness Professions located at the Albany campus offers massage therapy programs, medical assisting programs and practical nursing. Its massage therapy program may be taken as a certificate or degree program and enables students to qualify for the New York State Massage Therapy Examination. Mildred Elley also offers assistance to its graduates as they search for jobs after graduating.

The Center for Integrative Health and Healing

Although located south of Albany in Delmar, New York, the Center for Integrative Health and Healing is merely five minutes away from Albany. It offers a number of classes, including a five-day body cleanse program and one-day workshops on reiki, a Japanese energy healing technique that reduces stress and promotes self-healing. Their reiki certification program trains students at the practitioner and master levels.
